A REFLECTION ON THE MIRROR.
Banishing its Location in Elevators Not Likely to Receive Sympathy.

Marguerite's curiosity as to her perwonal appearance was characteristic of her sex. Every woman wants to know if what she has on is tecoming; nor is it any reproach to her that she is on the other foot, if anything. Indeed, with women the mirror serves of critical rather than admiring purpose. Do the stenographers in the elevator smirk at themselves in it like the young clerks, fatuously posting as devis or fellows, with a backward glance at that pretty blond who gets off at the seventeenth floor? The alirror is seldom attainable by mere man. The wrath of the objurgator of the stenographers is turned in the word direction. "Look in your heart and write,"—Public Ledger.
